As a guide below are the 10 principles which the EDO believes should inform and underpin a new approach to planning in NSW. These principles have been developed through the EDO's analysis and review of planning laws in recent years, including in relation to recent changes in 2011.

The principles are aimed at achieving ecologically sustainable development (ESD), and restoring balance, transparency and accountability to the planning system.

1. A focus on Strategic Planning
2. Implementing ecologically sustainable development (ESD)
3. Improving the objectivity, credibility and cumulative impact review of environmental impact assessment
4. Genuine, appropriate and timely public participation
5. Transparency and accountability for major public projects
6. Recognising the pre-eminent role of the Land and Environment Court
7. Applying a meaningful 'maintain or improve' test to key developments
8. Making planning law climate-ready
9. Ensuring integration with other environmental legislation
10. Regular review of the Act
